Ranthambhore National Park

Ranthambhore National Park is hailed as one of India's finest wildlife sanctuaries. A hunting reserve for the Maharajas of Jaipur, the Park was once open to only the select few. But gone are the days of it being the destination of royal hunting parties, Ranthambhore is now strictly a home to India's wildlife. Nearly 400 sq kms, the Park is set between the Aravalli and Vindhya range, its forests once a part of the magnificent jungles of Central India. Today, Ranthambhore is famous for its tigers and is often referred to as the best place to see these majestic predators of the wild.

Ranthambhore's unique climatic and vegetation features have given rise to forests that are dry and open with little and stunted ground cover. This makes wildlife viewing relatively easier on the safari. There are over 320 species of birds, both resident and migratory, over 40 species of mammals and over 35 species of reptiles. Due to the dry climate there are not many species of amphibians in Ranthambhore national park.

BIRD WATCHING SAFARIS

WILDLIFE SAFARIS

This National park is a wildlife enthusiast and photographer's dream. The three major lakes, Rajbaugh, Milak talao and Padam talao attract a variety of migratory birds. The lakes are covered with pink lotuses on which the sambar deer often feed. The grassy edges are frequented by chitals, wild boars and other ungulates. The Marsh crocodiles bask on the shores, the Tigers are often on the prowl at the peripheries. The park is studded with small covered pavilions, ancient summer palaces and crumbling guard posts that bear mute testimony of Rajput Kingdoms and battles long forgotten. Imposingly looming above the National park is the Ranthambhore Fort, in itself a major tourist attraction.

There are 2 types of vehicles used for safaris – Jeeps and Canters. The Park restricts the number of jeeps entering, and bookings are therefore subject to availability. The canter is a large open vehicle booked on sharing basis and is a guaranteed alternative of visiting the park. The jungle drives can be undertaken in the morning and/or afternoon as per your preference. Knowledgeable forest guards are also available to accompany you on the jungle drives.
